Navigation Structure Rationale

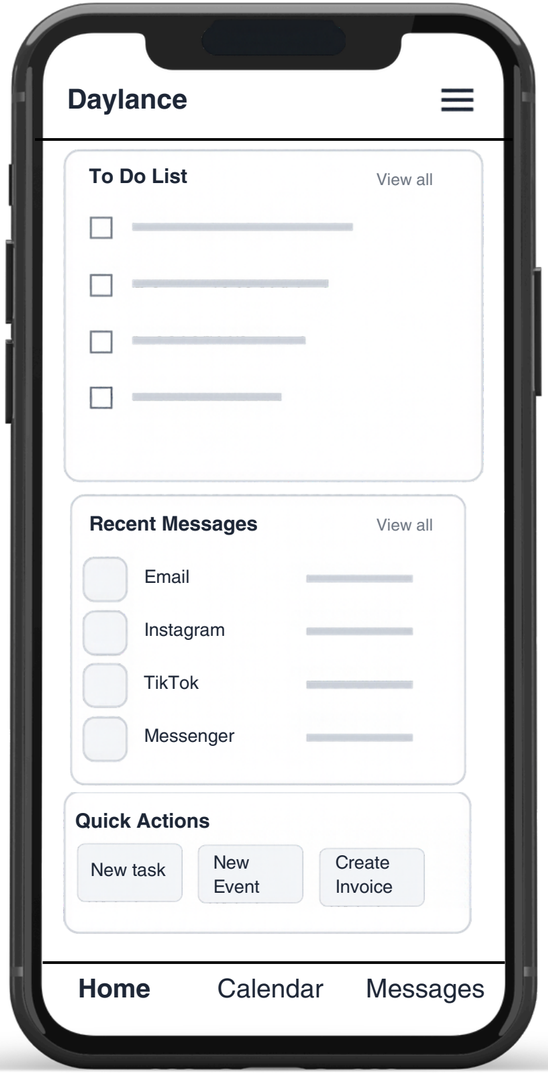

The homepage functions as a dashboard, giving freelancers a snapshot of everything active at a glance: a mini calendar with upcoming tasks, a condensed to-do list, and recent messages pulled from connected platforms. This means a freelancer can open the site and immediately see what needs attention today without digging into individual pages.

The five main pages each map to a distinct, recurring part of freelance work:

- Calendar/Tasks expands the homepage's mini calendar into a full view, letting freelancers add, edit, and organize tasks weekly or monthly, plus see a full schedule overview.
- Incoming Messages consolidates communication from email, social platforms, and other messaging apps into one inbox, so freelancers aren't switching between five different apps to reply to clients.
- Projects tracks active client work: deliverables, project details, and progress, separate from communication so project status doesn't get lost in a message thread.
- Income/Invoicing handles the financial side - tracking monthly income, creating and sending invoices, monitoring payment status, logging expenses, and tax aid.
- Content Planning covers content ideas, assets and files, captions and notes, with the ability to schedule content directly into the main calendar - tying content work back into the freelancer's overall schedule.

Pages are organized by function rather than by client, since freelancers juggling multiple clients think in terms of daily tasks (what's due, who messaged, what needs invoicing) rather than by individual client relationship. This keeps the structure scalable as new clients or projects are added without requiring the navigation itself to change.
